

Fiber optic cable 400

AI Overview

Fiber optic cables labeled "400" can refer to either 400G Ethernet-capable cables or 400-meter long fiber cables, designed for high-speed, low-loss data transmission in enterprise and data center networks.

400G Ethernet Fiber Optic Cables For high-speed networking, 400G duplex multimode fiber cables are designed to support 400G Ethernet applications up to 100 meters using OM4-rated 50/125 μm fibers. These cables are backward compatible with 40G and 100G networks, making them suitable for future-proofing network infrastructure. They often feature compact CS connectors, which are 40% smaller than standard LC connectors, allowing high-density installations in switches or patch panels. The cables typically have magenta jackets for easy identification and low-smoke zero-halogen (LSZH) jackets for safety in enclosed spaces (Eaton).

400-Meter Fiber Optic Cables Cables with a 400-meter length are commonly used to connect multiple network devices over longer distances, such as in large data centers, industrial setups, or campus networks. Multi-strand cables, such as 4-strand pre-terminated fiber cables, allow multiple data streams to transmit simultaneously, supporting speeds from 1G up to 10G. These cables feature snap coupling latches for easy installation and protection of fibers, and they help organize and identify individual strands for efficient troubleshooting (FastCabling).

Key Features Across 400G and 400-Meter Cables

- High-speed performance: Supports 1G–400G depending on cable type and network equipment.
- Durable construction: LSZH or reinforced jackets protect fibers from damage and environmental hazards.
- Connector types: Options include CS, LC, SFP/SFP+, SMA-905, or FC/PC connectors depending on application.
- Multi-strand capability: Enables simultaneous transmission of multiple data streams for high-traffic networks.
- Ease of installation: Pre-terminated cables with labeled fibers and dust caps simplify setup and maintenance.
- Applications
 - Data centers: High-density 400G connections and lon...
